

Gavriel Salomon

Professor of educational psychology at the Faculty of Education at the University of Haifa, Israel

Salomon is the recipient of an honorary doctorate from the University of Leuven, Belgium (1999), and of the Israel National Award for life long achievements in educational research (2001).

He received his B.A. and M.A. (Summa cum Laude) in geography, education, and psychology from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel (1966), and his Ph.D. in educational psychology and communication from Stanford University (1968). Since then he has taught at numerous universities in the USA, Mexico, Switzerland and Japan and is a fellow of the Center for the Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford (1998-9), the American Psychological Society (1985), and of the Division of Educational Psychology of the American Psychological Association (1983). Salomon served as editor of Educational Psychologist (1991-5) and as president of the Educational, Instructional and School Psychology Division of the International Association of Applied Psychology (IAAP), 1990-1994. He is currently co-director of the Center for Research on Peace Education.

His work covers a range of topics: the cognitive effects of media's symbol systems, the expenditure of mental effort, mindfulness and mindlessness, organizational change, the design of intelligent computer tools, the design and systemic study of technology-afforded learning environments, and - more recently - research on peace education.

Professor Salomon has written three books: 1) Interaction of Media, Cognition and Learning, Jossey-Bass (1979) (and again: LEA, 1994), announced as a "Citation Classic"; 2) Communication and Education, Sage (1981), and 3) Technology, and education in the information age (Hebrew). He is also edited the books Distributed Cognitions, Cambridge University Press (1993), and Peace education: The concept, principles, and practices around the world (Lawrence Erlbaum Associates, 2002). In addition he has published more than 100 empirical, theoretical, and methodological articles in a variety of professional journals in the USA, Israel, Europe, and Latin America.