Embeddedness and Migration
- Local Dynamics in a Mobile World

Embeddedness and Migration - Local Dynamics in a Mobile World

Social reality and social science seem to fall in different compartments. On the one hand we are facing the trends of globalisation, mobility and migration, where flows and networks reshape economies, socialities and cultures into scapes and routes. On the other hand, local development is still an issue of producing places of meaningful life, business and identities that still seem to be territorially localised for the majority of people. However, these compartments are collapsing. While the embeddedness of economic life seems to be about the ties in and dependence of moving objects en-route (e.g. the metaphor of “embeddedness in a military tank”), migrants and refugees, although still on the move, are de- and reconstructed into local people and places.

This course critically exercises the complexities of these plural processes, with a departure in economic and cultural sociology and social theory.

The Nordic Research School on Local Dynamics - NOLD

This is the 7th PhD-course arranged by the Nordic Research School on Local Dynamics, NOLD. The school has its focus on the local level and the dynamics taking place inside northern local communities, between them, and related to actors and processes at a regional, national, international and global level.

Among issues of particular interest are questions concerning new technologies, natural resource management, mobility, and tourism. The Nordic Research School On Local Dynamics aims to strengthen co-operation in research and education between Universities and Research Institutions in the Nordic area.
